BORN TOUGH types of leather used on tool pouches

Oil tanned leather is infused with aniline dye that is "floating" in an oil mix. This means the dye is not bound to the leather. Rather it can move inside the hide. Oil tanned leather has a certain aged look and because it's top grain leather, this leather has plenty of physical durability.

Nubuck is a type of leather with a soft, velvety surface. Nubuck leather is usually manufactured only from the best, undamaged hides. As a result it is the most expensive as well as the most durable of leathers.

Suede is a type of leather with napped finish. Suede leather is made from the underside of the skin. Mostly suede is made from split hide. It's less durable than compared to Nubuck leather.
